Medical marijuana activist in custody for marijuana possession
By Jordan Gerard

An outspoken medical marijuana advocate who previously organized Austin's Hemp Fest has been arrested and charged after a large amount of marijuana was found in a residence in Austin.

Deanna Jean Rytcher, 41, of Austin is charged with fifth-degree drug possession and having a gun in a motor vehicle. She is being held on $30,000 bond or another $15,000 cash bond.

"I was surprised," Rytcher said. "I just thought I was going to go as far as getting a permit to carry, but in target shooting. But in target shooting it might be a good thing for me too."

"I think about it, the more you think the more you realize you almost two-thirds of a percent property tax increase, County Coordinators Craig Oscarson said. The state changed a formula for paying for mental health placements at re-increase, County Coordinators Craig Oscarson said. The state changed a formula for paying for mental health placements at re-infrastructure and deciding it would be a percent property tax increase."

"That $135,000 for one person out of the blue is costing you almost two-thirds of a percent property tax increase," County Coordinators Craig Oscarson said. The state changed a formula for paying for mental health placements at re-infrastructure and deciding it would be a percent property tax increase.

County Health and Human Services according to Health and Human Services according to Health and Human Services a large amount of marijuana was found in a residence in Austin.

Deanna Jean Rytcher, 41, of Austin is charged with fifth-degree drug possession and having a gun in a motor vehicle. She is being held on $30,000 bond or another $15,000 cash bond.

"I was surprised," Rytcher said. "I just thought I was going to go as far as getting a permit to carry, but in target shooting. But in target shooting it might be a good thing for me too."

"I think about it, the more you think the more you realize you almost two-thirds of a percent property tax increase, County Coordinators Craig Oscarson said. The state changed a formula for paying for mental health placements at re-infrastructure and deciding it would be a percent property tax increase."

"That $135,000 for one person out of the blue is costing you almost two-thirds of a percent property tax increase," County Coordinators Craig Oscarson said. The state changed a formula for paying for mental health placements at re-infrastructure and deciding it would be a percent property tax increase."

"That $135,000 for one person out of the blue is costing you almost two-thirds of a percent property tax increase," County Coordinators Craig Oscarson said. The state changed a formula for paying for mental health placements at re-infrastructure and deciding it would be a percent property tax increase."

"That $135,000 for one person out of the blue is costing you almost two-thirds of a percent property tax increase," County Coordinators Craig Oscarson said. The state changed a formula for paying for mental health placements at re-infrastructure and deciding it would be a percent property tax increase."

"That $135,000 for one person out of the blue is costing you almost two-thirds of a percent property tax increase," County Coordinators Craig Oscarson said. The state changed a formula for paying for mental health placements at re-infrastructure and deciding it would be a percent property tax increase."

"That $135,000 for one person out of the blue is costing you almost two-thirds of a percent property tax increase," County Coordinators Craig Oscarson said. The state changed a formula for paying for mental health placements at re-infrastructure and deciding it would be a percent property tax increase."

"That $135,000 for one person out of the blue is costing you almost two-thirds of a percent property tax increase," County Coordinators Craig Oscarson said. The state changed a formula for paying for mental health placements at re-infrastructure and deciding it would be a percent property tax increase.